

A CARD.

I have disposed of the business of The Taney County Star and transferred its subscription list to The Taney County Republican. The Republican will carry on my contracts with all subscribers to whom I am indebted on account of The Star. A similar arrangement has been made in regard to advertising contracts. On the other hand The Republican will collect all subscription bills that are due to The Star. Advertising and job work accounts for work done prior to the 21st of November 1895 are payable to me. In retiring from the publication of The Star, I beg leave to return thanks to my friends for their long continued support and hope that they will find The Republican a good local newspaper, which I believe it will be.

This case is similar to the one which was heard in Commissioner Silsby's court on Oct. 3, and which has recently been amicably settled. Mary E. McCoy and her son Mike were charged with intimidating a homesteader. Mrs. McCoy is a poor widow and lives near Kissee Mills, in Taney county. She has resided on a farm there for 18 years and thought it was deeded land, it having been sold by different parties several times. She and her son had made some good improvements and had spent their lifetime in making a home. They never suspected that their title to the land was not good, but the records show that it is government land.

James F. Barnes came here from the north last summer and after making a trip to Taney county filed a homestead entry on the land occupied by Mrs. McCoy and went down there a short time ago to get possession. Mrs. McCoy and her son told him that if he came on the land it would be at his peril. They made threats against him and he was so intimidated that he feared to take possession of the farm.

Public sentiment in the neighborhood was strongly against Barnes. While the residents of the community recognize the legality of his claim, they denounce him in the strongest terms for trying to get the widow's home.

When the case came up in the federal court at the last term the government officers agreed not to prosecute Mrs. McCoy if she would give Barnes possession of the property. This she agreed to do, but afterward he decided not to molest her. While court was in session here it is said that United States Marshal Joe Shelby took Barnes to one side and gave him a lecture. He told him that his action in taking a homestead on a widow's claim was, to say the least, not regarded as chivalrous in this community, and the best thing he could do to silence his conscience was to have his entry changed to another piece of property. Barnes agreed to do this, and his application is now pending in the department at Washington. —Springfield Leader-Democrat.

The Hensley Case.

The preliminary trial of W. P. Hensley, charged with the murder of Ed. Fickie, was held before Esquire Meranda last week in the court room here and came to an end on Friday afternoon. The court committed the defendant without bail to await the action of the grand jury. Prosecuting Attorney Ford, W. G. Robertson, of Springfield, and Geo. L. Taylor represented the State. Mr. Hensley was defended by B. B. Price, C. H. Groom and D. F. McConkey.

The battle between the lawyers was one of the hardest ever seen in Taney county and interested the spectators in the highest degree. Most of the arguments were made by Messrs. Price and Robertson and were often eloquent while always forcible. Not a point was conceded without a struggle. As soon as Esquire Meranda had committed the defendant and before the commitment could take effect or the defendant be placed in jail, Judge Rice, presiding judge of the county court, issued a writ of habeas corpus. On Saturday Judge Rice ascended the bench and invited his associates, Judge W. B. Sims and Judge U. G. Johnson to sit with him, which they did. The attorneys then argued the case from a purely legal point of view on the testimony taken in the trial court. This time the defendant's attorneys were successful and the court released Mr. Hensley on a $10,000 bond. The gentlemen whose names follow went on the defendant's bond: J. M. Haworth, S. W. Boswell, J. C. Parrish, J. H. Parrish, W. M. Wade, Ben McKinney, Clayton Stokely, E. E. Stires and L. C. Walker. The bond is one of the best ever made in Taney county.
